Architects' Darling 2019: GEZE wins double awards

GEZE secured its place as one of the most important manufacturers in the construction sector twice at the Architects' Darling Awards 2019. As part of the industry survey by Heinze GmbH of over 2000 architects and planners, GEZE received the coveted silver and bronze prizes in the 'Safety Technology and Access Control Systems' and 'Automatic Doors' categories respectively.

"We are extremely delighted about winning again at Architects' Darling 2019. GEZE supports architects as a partner in planning and implementing liveable buildings. We will also be promoting the digital networking of building technology in future, and winning customers the world over with intelligent and innovative products," says Gabi Bauer, Head of International Marketing at GEZE GmbH.

In focus: safety and convenience

GEZE intensively advises architects through the entire project life cycle. The experts in door, window and safety technology offer individual advice not only about individual products in all phases of a project. The Leonberg business has already received several awards for its safety and access control systems. An example of this is GEZE Cockpit: an innovative building automation system that intelligently networks GEZE products from the areas of door, windows and safety systems, thereby not only providing extra safety, but more convenience and economy as well.

Excellent: automatic doors

Automatic doors enjoy great significance among architects. They can often be found in the entrance area of a building and have an impact on a visitor's initial impression. It is especially gratifying that GEZE was able to win points from renowned architects and be awarded with the bronze phoenix with its customised solutions in the field of automatic doors.
